

CAN YOU BUY AN ELECTION?

Special interests supported several candidates in the November 2007 council election in Benicia, a city with similar demographics to Pinole. Read the article below, from the Contra Costa Times for that election's results.

Benicia election shows money's limitations

WITH EVERY ELECTION, the amount of money spent on campaigns expands like waistlines after Thanksgiving. But a bowl of gravy-soaked cash does not guarantee success, as Benicia's recent election outcome proves.

The two losers out-raised the three successful candidates two-to-one. Combined, the candidates and the various independent expenditure groups had collected a shocking $331,000 for the mayor and City Council races in a town of 27,000 people. Mayor-elect Elizabeth Patterson raised about $6 a vote, a fraction of the $30 per vote raised by or in support of challenger Bill Whitney.

The inverse relationship between money and results is a product of small-town politics, campaign overkill and two, last-minute smear pieces on Patterson that may have cost Whitney the election.

In a small town, many residents know the candidates personally, and the flood of costly mailers and local newspaper ads probably did little good. But, ironically, the two ill-conceived hit pieces on Patterson that arrived in Benicians' mailboxes several days before the election may have torpedoed Whitney's campaign: He lost by just 179 votes.

A small cadre of construction firms from outside Benicia paid for the nasty mailers, which inaccurately painted Patterson as a screaming shrew seeking office in a vendetta against the city over a property dispute.

"It was a foolish and critical tactical error by inexperienced people with their own agendas," said a political consultant. "It was very bad for Whitney."

It was bad for Benicia, too.

From 2004-2007, Councilwoman Maria Alegria raised $60,000. From 2006-2007, Councilman Stephen Tilton raised $10,000. The majority came from special interests.

Maria
Alegria

Stephen
Tilton

Vote YES to recall Maria Alegria and Stephen Tilton

This flyer comes to you from

CONCERNED CITIZENS OF PINOLE FOR THE RECALL OF MARIA ALEGRIA AND STEPHEN TILTON

(510) 587-3225

FPPC ID# 1298568

Visit www.PinoleRecall.com for more information